Mike Amor is one of Australia's most experienced TV correspondents and presenters. He spent 18 years as Bureau Chief for the Seven Network based in Los Angeles covering many of the biggest stories this century, including being on the ground during the September 11 terrorist attacks, the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina as well as five U.S. elections and five Olympics.

Mike's dramatic rescue of a toddler trapped in the rubble of her family home for three days after the devastating Haiti earthquake earned him the prestigious Edward R Murrow National Award - one of the highest honors in American journalism. He's won more than 30 international awards.

He's the author of "News Cowboys" - a bestselling behind the lens look at life on the road as a foreign correspondent.

Mike is also a proud Ambassador for Glaucoma Australia after battling to save his sight from the disease.
